CONNECT

GROW

Networking works when relationships come first

Meaningful networking begins with curiosity, genuine interest, and trust....not an immediate sales pitch.

GOAL: Move beyond exchanging contact information and begin building relationships that create opportunity and impact.

CURIOSITY

INTEREST

TRUST

Five ways to turn a contact into a meaningful connection

- 01 Listen Before You Lead

- 02 Say It With Confidence

- 03 Your Personal Board of Directors

- 04 My Strength, Your Strength

- 05 Do It Before You Leave

Listen Before You Lead

Pair with someone you do not know.

Each woman has two minutes to share. The listener stays curious and waits to offer ideas, resources, or connections until the speaker finishes.

ASK, THEN LISTEN

What are you currently working toward?

What challenge are you facing?

What support would be helpful?

Say It With Confidence

If people cannot clearly explain what you do, they cannot connect you to the right opportunities.

YOUR VALUE STATEMENT

I help _____ do _____ so they can _____

Partner feedback: Was it clear? Was it confident? Would I know when to refer someone to her?

Practice it. Refine it. Say it again.

Build Your Personal Board of Directors

A large contact list is not the same as a strong network. Write one name beside each role, and notice what is missing.

Choose Collaboration Over Competition

Some women are not your competition. They are your missing connections.

In groups of three or four, share:

- 01 One thing I do exceptionally well

- 02 One area where I need support

- 03 One resource or connection I can offer

Do It Before You Leave

A connection without follow-up is usually just a conversation.

Choose one woman you met today and send a personalized message before you leave.

Intentional action turns a meeting into a relationship.

WOMAN 2 WOMAN

Build relationships.
Open doors.
Create impact.

Networking is not about collecting the most contacts. It is about creating opportunities that strengthen women, businesses, communities, and legacies.
